Injunction to close denied

by KIM HANSEN
Universe Staff Writer

A motion by the American Civil Liberties Union for a preliminary injunction to close the Provo Canyon School pending the outcome of a million lawsuit was denied Saturday in Salt Lake City by Federal Judge Bruce Jenkins.

Jenkins said the ACLU's request to close the school was denied because of failure to establish a clear and present danger to the boys attending at the school. "I don't think we should shut the school down," he said. "The Provo Canyon School serves an important need in the community."

According to ACLU attorney Kathryn Ward, the charges against school officials included the violation of the civil and constitutional rights of the students by forcibly administering polygraph tests, censoring mail and subjecting the boys to "cruel and unusual punishment."

Jenkins said relocating the boys if the school was closed would be a real detriment to their education and rehabilitation.

Although the school will remain open, Jenkins enjoined school officials from administering the polygraph test to the boys for any purpose. The school was also prohibited from tampering with the boys' mail except for purposes of removing contraband items.

As to whether these restrictions will affect the program at the school, Dr. Robert H. Crist, school medical director, said, "The things Judge Jenkins enjoined us from doing are relatively minor in relation to the operation of the school."

Concerning the relationship between the Provo Canyon School and the state of Utah, Jenkins said, "There is a void in the state law regarding this rather interesting and creative institution." He also said there was no supervising agency in Utah which has the responsibility to monitor the activities of the school.

Steve Morris, public information director for the school, said school officials are delighted the Judge recognized the need for closer ties between the state and the school. "We have been wanting to establish a good working relationship with the state for sometime," Morris said.

No date has been set for the trial of the original lawsuit, which was filed last September on behalf of students Timothy Milonas of Nevada and Kenneth Rice of Alaska. It is expected to come before Jenkins in late summer of this year.

Marriott Center crew proves busy by night

By TIM WOODLAND
Universe Staff Writer

After basketball games in the Marriott Center, while loyal fans are home in bed, the custodial staff works far into the night cleaning the building of debris and setting up for future events.

Nearly 40 students and staff work until about 3 a.m. to get the building set up for future use, said Vern Young, area supervisor of custodial upkeep for the Marriott Center.

"We spend several hours before a game also, preparing the floors and setting up turnstiles and tables to be used during the game."

Clean-up after a game is usually more time consuming though, he said. All the floors must be swept as well as polished. The game floor must also be set up for firesides, conferences, or other scheduled events. The amount of trash gathered by the crew is about a whole garbage truck full, Young said.

The custodial crew spends four or five hours before a game getting the building into "number one" condition, Young said. "We set up chairs for the press, and television stations," as well as referral tables for the missionaries to use, he said. Another duty of the crew is to place the turnstiles at the doors and put up signs so the public and students will know where to enter, he said.

The crew is responsible for setting up lights in the scouting booths as well as chairs for the teams. Chairs are also set up along the student side at floor level. Two rows of chairs for the stu-

China strengthens Viet Nam invasion

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Well-informed Chinese sources in Peking predict China's invasion force in Vietnam will launch its biggest offensive within several days, Japan's Kyodo news service reported Monday in a dispatch from the Chinese capital.

It quoted the sources as saying China's "punitive action" will reach its critical stage this week, with the twin goals of destroying at least one Vietnamese army division and Vietnam's military bases near the border, including artillery positions.

Kyodo also reported that Peking Radio said Chinese troops had engaged Vietnamese army regulars in hand-to-hand fighting near Dong Dang, a village three miles inside Vietnam. Most reports from China and Vietnam have indicated Vietnamese militias were doing most of the fighting, with the Hanoi government not committing its regular army units.

The Peking broadcast said that after a day of heavy fighting "a Chinese battalion overran five hilltop positions" near Dong Dang, "destroyed a maze of enemy dugouts and repulsed repeated attacks mounted by the enemy from below," according to Kyodo. It said the broadcast gave no casualty figures and didn't say when the fighting occurred.

Vietnam said Sunday its counter-attacking troops killed almost 4,000 Chinese in weekend battles all along the border, and a total of 16,000 since the invasion began Feb. 17. But China was pouring in reinforcements, Hanoi radio said.

At U.N. headquarters in New York, Vietnamese and Cambodian delegates exchanged bitter charges Saturday at the Security Council's debate on the invasions of both Cambodia and Vietnam. The council passed no resolutions and after several hours of debate Sunday adjourned until Tuesday.

The supporters of the ousted China-backed Cambodian regime of Premier Pol Pot claimed Sunday to have "put out of action" more than 1,000 Vietnamese soldiers last week along three national highways and near provincial capitals. It said the Vietnamese left 670 bodies "on the battlefields."

In Moscow, the official Soviet press stepped up its accusations that the United States was encouraging China in its war against Vietnam.

But there was a report President Carter was applying new pressure on the Chinese to end the war. British Prime Minister James Callaghan, after a telephone call from Carter, was reported to have ordered a slowdown of talks for the sale of warplanes to Peking.

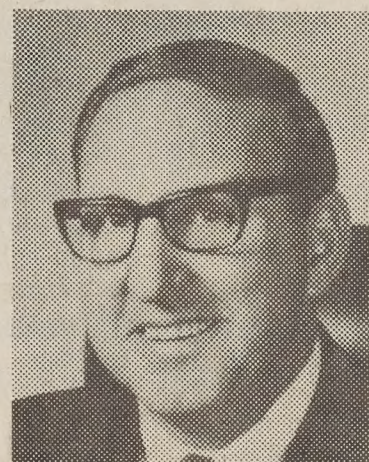

The Voice of Vietnam radio, monitored here, said the Vietnamese had destroyed 160 Chinese tanks in fighting Saturday and Sunday.

The battle reports and Chinese casualty tolls could not be independently verified, and some analysts in Bangkok said they appeared exaggerated. China has issued no casualty reports, but the analysts here say Vietnam has suffered greater losses than the Chinese.

The Hanoi broadcast said Vietnamese troops mounted counter-attacks in Tan Lang village of Lai Chau province, northwest of Hanoi; Thanh Thuy village in Ha Tuyen province, north of the capital; and Tong Dang district of Lang Son province to the northeast. A counter-attack also was reported along Highway 4, which more or less parallels the Vietnam-China border in Cao Bang and Lang Son provinces.

The war thus far has been limited to the border areas of northern Vietnam. Intelligence specialists in Washington say the Chinese have penetrated possibly up to 20 miles into Vietnam in places but the average depth is estimated at 12 to 15 miles.

Liquor warning raises sales

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — There's debate whether liquor sales have been slowed by a law requiring Utah liquor outlets to post a warning against booze. But entrepreneurs say the measure has been great for T-shirts.

The 1977 Utah Legislature passed a bill requiring all locations selling liquor to post a sign reading:

"Warning. The consumption of alcoholic beverages purchased in this establishment may be hazardous to your health and the safety of others."

Since the signs went up, so have liquor sales — 7 percent by case sales and 11.1 percent by dollar volume.

Former State Rep. David C. Harvey, who sponsored the legislation, thinks it has kept sales below what they might have been. But Kenneth F. Wynn, director for the state Liquor Control Commission, said there is a theory the signs have contributed to increased drinking.

Wynn said there's no way of proving it, but the theory holds that some persons have purchased liquor because they read the warning signs. Had they not seen the posters, he said, many might not have known that liquor was available in an establishment.

Avalanche hits Alta lodge

Skiers were surprised to see a wall of snow roar out of Flagstaff Bowl Saturday and hit the east wing of the Alta Peruvian Lodge, breaking windows and covering cars.

At least 17 cars were trapped underneath the snow when slide areas were shot down as avalanche control measures. The avalanche left 20 feet of snow on the east parking lot and slammed into the side of the lodge high enough to cover the second story windows.

The manager of the lodge said no one was injured because they received a half hour warning before the shot was fired that brought down the snow slide. Several cars were also buried at Snowbird. Highway crews discovered a car that had been lifted about three feet and was sitting on top of a pine tree.

The talks would be held, possibly beginning later in the week, with Prime Minister Menachem Begin representing Israel but without the participation of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

Vandalism ruins valuable books

By FRANK RIGBY
Universe Staff Writer

Some people use razor blades and carefully cut out pictures. Others use less care and indiscriminately rip out pages and pictures they desire. Still others write notes and insert notes between the lines of books until the copy is unreadable. These people are book vandals. Many of them are continuously mutilating books in the Harold B. Lee library.

The problem of book mutilation is not a new one, nor is it limited to BYU, but when it occurs often among a particular set of books, teachers find they are limited in what they can assign their students to read.

"From a classroom teacher's point of view, the poor condition of many books limits what we can expect of the students," said Thomas Raty, coordinator for art education. "We can't assign the students to read about a famous artist when the artist's pictures have been cut out of the books and the copy on the back of the page is missing."

Raty said of the books he is concerned with in the library, more than 90 percent are cut or mutilated in some manner.

Books and periodicals hardest hit

In the library, books and periodicals dealing with art, photography, interior design and movies are the hardest hit by book mutilators.

Blaine Hall, humanities librarian, said there have been many theories over the years about which students are mutilating the books.

"Some people are book censors, who feel since they are offended at certain pictures in a book, they have to protect others," Hall said. "This is especially a problem with art and photography books where often pictures of nudes are featured."

Collectors form another group of book mutilators. These are students who collect articles and pictures to add to their own collections. Hall said these people either specifically intend to cut up a book or they don't have a nickel and don't want to go through the bother of copying a page.

The largest group of book mutilators are students who receive assignments where they have to collect specific pictures for a journal, Hall said.

"The Interior Design department, for example, used to require journals containing actual pictures from magazines or journals," he said. "The required pictures were difficult to find and many students would cut up library periodicals to complete their assignments."

Hall said this has become less of a problem in recent months since the library reached an agreement with certain professors to allow students to simply copy required pictures rather than obtain an original from a magazine.

Book and magazine mutilation causes havoc with the library staff since it costs a great deal of time and money to replace lost materials.

Paul Jordan, director of the library acquisitions department, said the average book purchased by the library costs $19.22. To this is added about $12 in handling costs, making each book a major investment.

"The books the library orders usually cost more than average since the library orders expensive, high-quality books. A book with a good representation of pictures and painting will cost much more than average," Jordan said.

Because of the cost and a limited library budget, few books are reordered. For the most part when a book is mutilated, the library tries to obtain a copy of the missing pages from another library.

Hall said the library sends an order to another library requesting they copy the page or article which has been cut out of a particular book. This doesn't always work because the copies are of poorer quality than the original page, it requires time and money to order replacement pages and often the neighboring libraries are missing the same pages.

Some books can't be replaced

"It's not just that book mutilation causes an inconvenience. Some books can't be replaced," Hall said. "When a rare book or one that is out of print is damaged, there is nothing we can do about it."

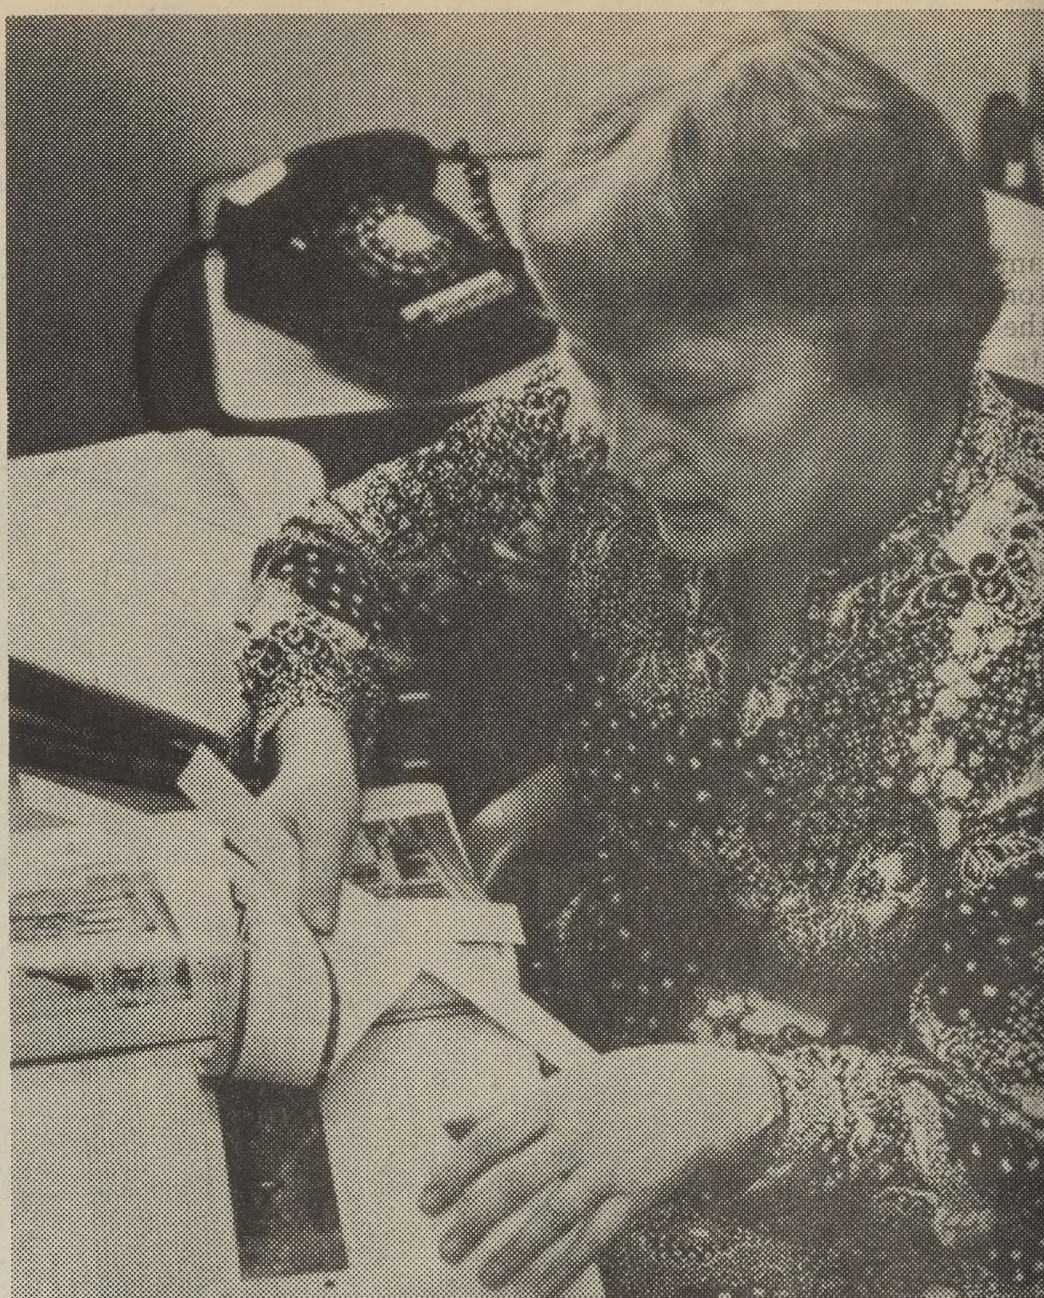

To protect itself, the library has gradually placed more and more books in locked cases. This makes it so the book is available only to students who sign for it.

"The photography magazines and many of the art books have been placed in locked cases for their protection," said Beth Webb, music and art librarian. "Actually, we hate to put books in locked cases because then they aren't available for browsing."

To further protect the books against mutilation, the library has worked on convincing the faculty not to give assignments that require pictures directly from books and magazines. Also, posters have been placed in various points in the library to alert students to the problem of book mutilation.

Mrs. Webb said the problem isn't as bad as it used to be because of the precautions the library has taken. "This year, fewer people have come to me with mutilated books than in previous years. Still, we don't know how many books have been mutilated because we only find them when students bring them to us."

Even with precautions, the library has difficulty protecting itself against book censors and people who for any reason cut out pictures of nudes.

dents are usually set up along the side of the court; however, for games when big crowds are expected up to three rows of chairs are set up, Young said.

On special occasions, the crew is also responsible for setting up the Reception Room and Cougar Room in the Marriott Center where special gatherings or parties can be held.

The custodial crew has duties to perform during the game also. "We must remove turnstiles so the public can get out at halftime," Young said. The duties of the crew also include helping during halftime shows. Sometimes special equipment is needed for the performing groups which "we are responsible for setting up," Young said. The staff also sweeps the court floor at half time.

Some interesting facts students usually are not aware of about the Marriott Center are surprising. The total roof area of the Marriott Center is three acres. The distance from the basketball court to the roof beams is nearly 100 feet. Young said the distance around the concourse is approximately a "quarter of a mile."

Some people think the floor is built on "springs," Young said. Actually the floor is built on wood suspension; there are no springs under the floor. There is wood under the floor that is "specially woven" to give the floor its springing effect.

From top to bottom, there are 60 rows of seats on the student side and only 50 on the public side. "The Marriott Center was designed like this so more students could attend the games," Young explained.

Eclipse makes profit about 450 people on the observatory hill a mile north of town, said Hoagie Nielson, a member of the observatory board of directors.

At Walla Walla, where the chance of cloud-free viewing was only 14 percent, the Chamber of Commerce received queries about lodging from as far away as California and St. Paul, Minn.

Lewiston, Mont., (pop. 8,000) expected 1,000 visitors, attracted by the eclipse plus seminars, two parades (one torchlight on snowmobiles), and a "10:42 a.m. Post-Eclipse Sale" by downtown merchants, said Mayor Robert LaFontaine.

Travel agencies booked hundreds of passengers for flights above the expected clouds. Seattle's Pacific Science Center chartered a Boeing 727 to wing eclipse-chasers 35,000 feet above the Columbia River gorge, complete with a champagne brunch after totality.

The path of the total eclipse, a shadow only 180 miles wide, swings across Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, north Dakota, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba. Along that path, the eclipse was forecast to last from 45 seconds to about three minutes. Other parts of the continent would see a partial eclipse.

The National Weather Service said a cold front would bring rain and clouds to much of the area.

Rock and Roll Jamboree

Senior citizens raise heart fund

Family members and community visitors mingled freely with residents at the Central Utah Convalescent Center in Orem Saturday.

As part of a fund drive co-sponsored by the American Heart Association, the convalescent center held a "Rock and Roll Jamboree." Visitors listened to two musical groups, bought craft and bake sales, and witnessed four residents receive awards.

Residents competed to see who could rock in their rocking chairs and who could roll in their wheelchairs the longest.

Edna Matheson won the rocking chair chair competition for the most continuous rocking during the three-hour event. Earlene Kesvery, activity director of the home, said Mrs. Matheson was determined to win. "That's just the kind of lady she is. We've almost lost her a couple of times, but she just comes back fighting."

The winner of the wheelchair rolling, Jean Shirliff, loves visitors and appreciated the open house.

Crowned queen and king as the oldest residents were Albina Selker and Carl Jensen. Mrs. Selker is approaching 96 and still takes care of herself and maintains a clear memory. Jensen, 86, is a former Orem Dentist.

Among the highlights of the evening were visits by the Dee Hamburger Clown and the Jarnigan family, a musical group which has been involved in productions with the Osmond family.

Jean Shirliff displays her trophy for winning the distance marathon in a wheelchair. The events in the "Rock and Roll Jamboree" were to earn funds for the American Heart Association.

Musie Peters, a resident at the Central Utah Convalescent Center, tries to keep up with the pace set by Jean Shirliff as they round the last corner of the wheelchair marathon.

Academic help available through Tutoring Service

Having trouble with a course? BYU's Tutoring Service can offer help in almost any subject.

The center currently has 10 tutors who are available to be suffering from underexposure. Andy Jones of the Tutoring Service said that students are usually the help they need to get from the service.

"Although the program is a real success, there are a lot of students who could benefit," she said.

The service, administered through the College of General Studies, acts as a "go-between" between teachers and students seeking assistance. Students pay for qualified tutors whose names are listed by the department.

Students can gain assistance on a one-to-one basis or in small groups of three to five students. Suggested prices are $3 an hour for undergraduate tutors and $4 for graduate tutors. Suggested fees for group tutoring range from $3.50 to $5. These rates may vary slightly with tutors.

Athletes, Lamanite students, veterans and handicapped students may be eligible for special department funding. The departments are generally willing to pay $2.50-$3.50 per hour for tutoring.

To ensure their qualifications, tutors connected with the service must be "cleared" through the department chairman," Miss Jones said.

Generally, tutors must have done well in the courses they wish to tutor and have taken at least one course above those classes. Applications for tutoring are available at the Tutoring Service of the Learning Services Center on the third floor HBLL.

Students are encouraged to check other ways of receiving help and then come to the Tutoring Service. Students should first talk with the instructor so he is aware of the individual's needs.

What appears to be a game of leap frog under the basket is in reality Cougar Steve Craig going high to block a Jim Allen shot which was fumbled out-of-bounds.

Clinch tie

Roberts paces Y win

By DAVE HEYLEN
Universe Sports Editor

He's known as "Boo" by his teammates, but Saturday night at center court in the Marriott Center Fred Roberts could have been labeled Mr. Majestic, as the freshman forward paced the BYU Cougars past a stubborn Colorado State, 66-61.

The Cougar victory ended three years of frustration for BYU mentor Frank Arnold as the win assured the Cougars a tie for the WAC championship. The victory pushed Arnold's BYU record into the plus category with 55 wins and 54 defeats.

Arnold may have had questionable moments during Saturday's final home game of the regular season as he watched his team exchange the lead 10 times in the first 10 minutes before finally losing it for the remainder of the first half with 10 minutes remaining. The Rams went into the locker room garnishing a 33-30 lead.

CSU played well

"I thought CSU played very well," Arnold said. "We didn't play badly in the first half."

The outcome of the contest was in question to the 22,953 hometown fans as CSU opened up the second half with a quick basket and a five-point lead. Any doubts of victory left their minds, though, as "Boo" took control of the Cougar offense and scored BYU's first nine points of the second half.

Roberts' six points from the field and three points from the free throw line returned the lead to the Cougars, who never relinquished it from then on.

BYU managed to open a 10-point margin over the Rams midway through the second half, but a stubborn CSU team fought back to within four with 44 seconds remaining. With 26 seconds left, Roberts scored a three-point play to ice the win for the Cougars.

Foul problems

Plagued with fouls in the second half, Ram mentor Jim Williams said the turning point of the game was Hughes' fourth foul early in the second half. Hughes returned to the game late in the contest and scored eight of the Rams final 18 points.

For Roberts, it was the fourth straight game he has paced the Cougars' scoring attack. The 6-10 forward hit eight baskets from the field, while adding 11 points from the charity stripe for a game-high 27 points.

Percentages from the field showed the Rams turning in a better performance, hitting 47 percent from the field compared to 43 percent for the Cougars. CSU also bettered the Cougars from the free throw line, hitting on 88 percent of their free throws, compared to 75 percent for BYU.

Despite CSU's performance, the Cougar victory came as a result of Ram fouls. BYU scored 24 points from the free throw line, compared to seven for CSU. The Rams were allowed only eight free throws the entire game.

Ainge's absence

When asked about the effect of the absence of Danny Ainge, Arnold said, "It's so hard to measure, I don't know. These two guards (Scott Runia and Steve Craig) went 40 minutes each. That last 10 minutes they were really tired."

Runia and Craig combined for 20 points and eight assists while causing two turnovers. Devin Durrant and Alan Taylor rounded out the Cougar scoring with eight and 10 points respectively.

CSU placed three of their starters in double figures with center Rudy Watley pacing the way with 22 points and 12 rebounds. Forward Alton Brandon and guard Eddie Hughes rounded out the double figure scorers with 12 and 14 points respectively.

With a tie for the WAC championship in their hands, the Cougar basketball squad will play their final conference game of the season Thursday against San Diego State. BYU dropped the Aztecs in their first meeting in Provo 88-80.

Women tracksters win BYU Invitational meet

Putting together a strong team showing, BYU easily outdistanced Nevada-Las Vegas 142-72 to repeat as champions of the BYU Indoor Track Invitational meet Saturday in the Smith Fieldhouse.

Cougar standout Themis Zambrzycki scored victories in the high jump, 5-6.75; shot put, 45-0 feet; as well as a new Region 7 record in the long jump, 20-4 feet to lead BYU.

UNLV's Lisa Thompson gave the crowd something to cheer about, running a hand timed 6.15 in the 50 meter sprint. Ms. Thompson's run, when converted to electric standards, fell just .07 seconds off of the existing world record held by Evelyn Ashford of UCLA.

Linda Bourn was second in the same 50 meter race, setting a Fieldhouse record of 6.38. Ms. Bourn also earned a first in the 50-meter hurdles, running a time of 7.01.

Hansen shines

Wrestling matmen win WAC

by LISA JOHNSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Cougar wrestling team was crowned king of the WAC for the third consecutive year on Saturday, having finished 9.5 points ahead of the next team in the WAC championships at Laramie, Wyo. Four first finishes jeweled the Cougar championship, and five BYU wrestlers will see action at the national finals as a result of the weekend's competi-

BYU also picked up the highest individual wrestler honor at the tournament when Brad Hansen, a sophomore from a fractured elbow, was named outstanding wrestler. Hansen easily took the 167 pound weight class title, pinning both his opponents on the mat. First he downed Doug Cryder of Colorado State and then Hansen went on to dispose of New Mexico's Clarence Lester, 1:30 into the final round.

Hansen was not the only Cougar to win his title. He won back-to-back pins. Donnie Owen, 158 pounds, recovered from an elbow injury, pinned Wyoming's Randy Taylor in a quick 1:55; then Bryce Smith of CSU succumbed to an Owen fall in the championship round.

Maisey and Craig Prete were the other two to win weight class titles. Ed Maisey, 134 pounds, pinned Lennie Lovato in 7:26 to make it to the finals, where he decided Cody Westbrook of Wyoming, 7-2.

Craig Prete, 142 pounds, wrestled one of the tour-ney's closest matches for his title. In the finals, Prete and Utah's Brad Vadais went into overtime before Prete came out on top, 3-2.

These four wrestlers will be BYU's WAC representatives to the NCAA finals March 9-10 in Ames, Iowa. Hansen and Maisey take with them their second and third national rankings respectively, and will have a chance to raise those rankings as they meet the wrestlers seeded above them for the first time at the national championships.

Another Cougar grappler has been selected to represent the WAC at the NCAA finals as one of the nine wild card choices allowed — 118 pound Brad Anderson, who finished third in the tournament. Anderson lost the first round of tournament action to Luke Gilpin of New Mexico, who went on to win the weightclass. In the consolation round, Anderson decided Jerry LaValley, 10-4.

BYU also featured two runners-up in the WAC finale. Scott Maynes, 126 pounds, made it to the finals before he was pinned by Tom Alexander of CSU. Billy Boyd, 177 pounds, was the other second placer, pinned by Wyoming's Tom Wertz in the championship round.

The rest of the Cougar grapplers finished fourth. They were 150-pound Dennis Blackner, 190-pound Scott Robinson, and heavyweight Mel Maxwell.

The Cougar success was more than Coach Fred Davis hoped for. Wyoming was BYU's closest competition, with a 66.5 finish to BYU's 76.

Women cagers sweep weekend homestand

By CHUCK GATES' Universe Sports Writer

BYU 107, Northern Arizona 67
BYU 107, Arizona State 56

The final scores tell the story better than anything. Combining hot shooting with an aggressive defense, the Cougars added conference victories six and seven in a row in weekend women's basketball action at the Smith Fieldhouse.

"I don't have to tell you how well they played," a befuddled ASU coach Paul Long said, pointing to the scoreboard following his team's 107-56 drubbing at the hands of BYU Saturday.

Long's remarks seem appropriate when describing BYU's play in both weekend games. The team combined good shooting, good rebounding and a tough opportunistic defense against both Arizona schools.

Northern Arizona coach Pam Wuestenberb said, "They played the fast break well and we had a tough time staying with them on the boards."

Long concurred, saying, "They played a great game and we didn't."

Cougar coach Courtney Leishman said he felt his team's strong showing was largely due to his young team maturing. Leishman also said his team began the season as typical freshmen with a lot of talent, but they were just now understanding "when, where and how" to play.

"We're peaking about right," Leishman said. "We're playing our best basketball."

Jackie Beene sparked in Friday's win and played solidly in Saturday's victory, showing that last weekend's strong play wasn't just chance. "Jackie played like we thought she could play," Leishman said of Ms. Beene's 26-point effort against Northern Arizona and her 17 points against ASU.

"She put the ball on the floor and went to the basket," Leishman said.

Ms. Beene wasn't alone, however. Against Northern Arizona, five players, Ms. Beene; Jeanette Weston, 18 points; Jenny Cox, 11; Karen Morlan, 11; and Tina Gunn, 21, totaled in double figures in a balanced scoring attack which saw BYU hit on 57 percent of their shots from the field. Saturday's Cougar shooting percentage was an even more impressive 59 percent from the floor with four players, Ms. Beene, Ms. Cox, Ms. Gunn and Rosemary Jensen all hitting in double figures.

Joe De Santis

Actor no 'superstar'

By DOUG SMITH
Universe Staff Writer

Joe De Santis is a character actor. He has appeared or performed in thousands of productions, including Wagon, Streets of San Francisco, and Dick Van Dyke Variety Show. He has a face that is easily recognizable, but his name is not so familiar, even in Provo, where he now resides.

The son of Italian immigrant parents, this artist has always been a perfectionist and becomes upset when a performance falls short.

Born and raised in New York City, De Santis received his education in the arts of the "Big Apple."

He said after graduation from high school and a short enrollment at City College of New York, he pursued an art education at several renowned schools. He studied at the Leonardo De Vinci School and the Beaux Arts Institute of Design. And under the tutelage of the master sculptor, Onorio Bontade, De Santis honed his artistic abilities.

Besides my art, my greatest memories have to be the work I have done on the live stage in New York City," De Santis said. "...In 1959 I acted in The Highest Tree, a first in many ways."

He said the play was the first production for two famous people. Bert Redford and Elizabeth Ashley made their debut performances and, of these, both went on to glorious careers in the entertainment profession.

Though De Santis has acted with many famous names, Mineo, Leslie Carone, and Barbara Bockwick, "I think the best movie I ever cast in was in 1962, Cold Wind in August ... I was the lead."

De Santis has made many guest appearances on familiar weekly TV series, from 77 Sunset Strip to Hawaii Five-O.

"My latest TV movie was Contract on Cherry Street," De Santis said. "I co-starred with the returning Frank Sinatra."

While reminiscing about his acting accomplishments, De Santis always returns to his heart's first love — art.

"Acting is a 'some time' business. You do a movie in three months and you could be out of work for nine months," he said.

"My first love is sculpturing. It has been a part of me throughout my acting career I have even had some art pieces appear with me on a movie set."

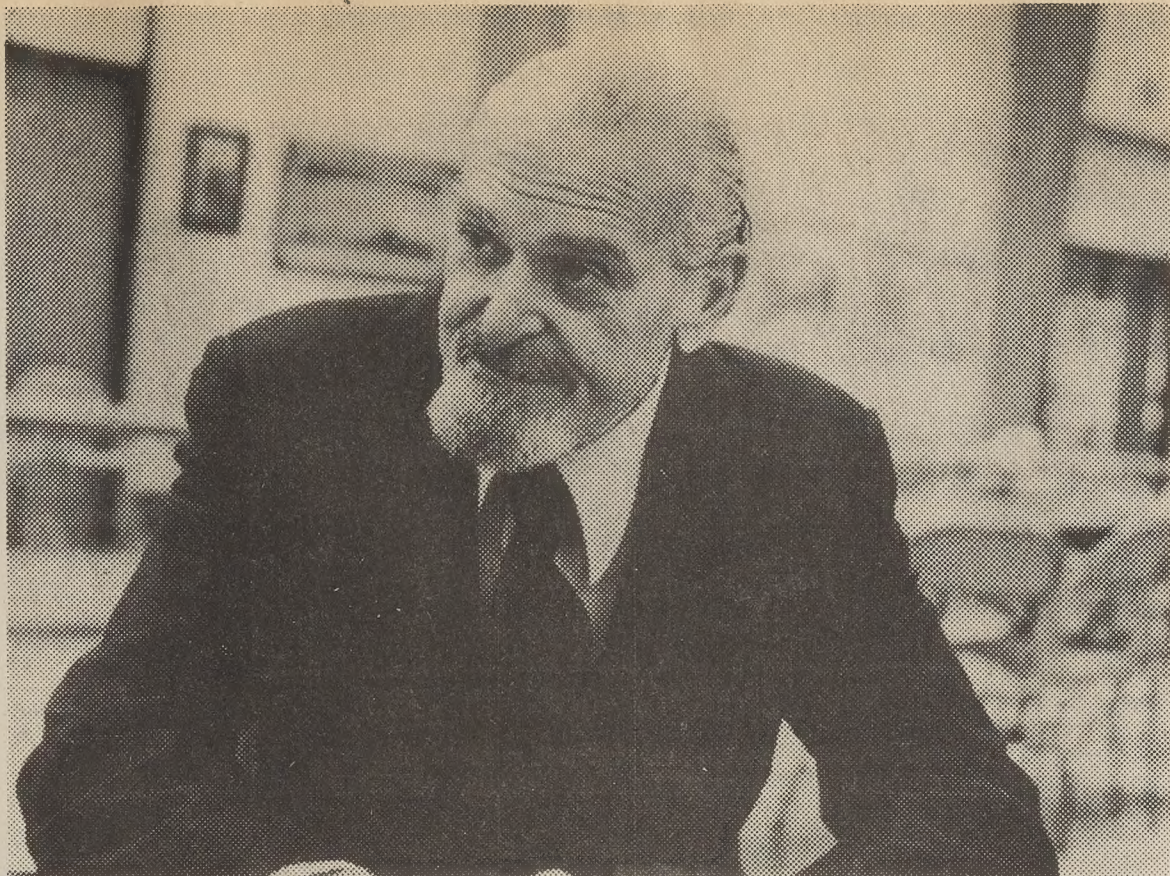

Although most actors live in New York City or Hollywood, De Santis has moved to the mountains of Utah to live.

"My son, Chris, transferred to BYU from the University of Utah to get his masters degree and I wanted to live near him," De Santis said.

He said he misses New York City and the stage, but for now he will live and work on his sculptures in Provo.

At first glance, Joe De Santis seems like a rough and invulnerable individual, the result of a life of hard work. But a few moments spent with this accomplished actor reveals a sincere, touching spirit.

Though De Santis is not noted as a "Super-Star," Utahns have their own classy star in Joe De Santis.

Though actor Joe De Santis, who lives in Provo, has appeared in hundreds of TV shows as a character actor, he says his first love is sculpture.

Body Snatchers' chilling, believable sci-fi thriller

By JANETHA HANCOCK
Universe Staff Writer

There's something about summer rain, lush green plants and normal, everyday people that makes you feel safe and right at home. Until...

Body Snatchers will make you wonder whether your neighbors are really your neighbors. You might

The alien body snatchers work through plant "pods," which actually seem to give birth to duplicate bodies. The whole ordeal is a bit gruesome.

There are scenes of Sutherland attacking his own "snatched body" with a garden hoe, and of a dog who, because of a mixed-up pod, is recreated with his owner's face. It will send chills up the spine.

Soon the story becomes Sutherland's fight for survival. It seems nearly everyone in the city is one of "them." And "they" don't feel too comfortable around humans, referred to affectionately as "Type H" by a snatched taxi-cab driver.

Acting excellent

The acting, editing and cinematography in Body Snatchers are excellent.

Especially good were Sutherland and Adams. Their personalities were entirely believable, and they carried most of the action in the movie.

Their reactions, instead of seeming paranoid, are those of anyone faced with a situation where suddenly everyone is an enemy. They are always running. Running from something they don't quite understand, but don't have time to stop and figure out for fear of the tragic consequences.

Leonard Nimoy (of Mr. Spock fame) plays a snatched friend of Sutherland's and a famous psychologist who has just enough of a weird, alien personality to make you wonder about him. And any doubting is justified. He can't be trusted ... or can he? Can anyone?

Spine-chiller

The movie is edited to keep one on his toes (or the edge of your seat — or both). And it does. Action, frustration and fear are always present. Even after the movie is over you'll still be piecing things together. The search scene for Sutherland ends in the blinding whiteness of a flashlight ... what is happening???

Even if you're familiar with the old Body Snatchers, it's impossible to figure it all out. The ending will leave you stunned — quite a surprise.

If you like science fiction, or even if you don't, Body Snatchers is a must. It'll scare you to death.

Institute grants

BYU David O. McKay Institute has received a $75,000 grant from the National Data Education Corporation of Minneapolis, Minn.

Livingston, manager of Data Communications Higher Education Project Line, presented check for $75,000 to President Dallin.

Donald T. Nelson, director of The Development Office of the LDS Church, said the grant will be used to develop instructional units for English to non-English speaking people using the Control PLATO computer-education system.

The project is under the direction of Dr. Otto, professor of Bilingual Education in the Department of Linguistics.

BYU is very pleased to have this opportunity to advance its leadership in the field of bilingual education.

Donald G. Musturd, Dean V. Wiberg and M. Dean Klinger, all graduate students in chemical engineering check over one of the Alka-Seltzer powered boats before a race during Engineering Week.

Engineering week

Contest winner announced

By DAVID WEBB
Universe Staff Writer

The imagination of BYU students went wild Friday as the departmental contests brought Engineering Week to a climax.

The barrage of weird contraptions entered in the various contests rivaled the special effects of Star Wars. Miniature windmills on wheels, floating bombs powered by Alka-seltzer and electric motors made from nails and masking tape demonstrated Yankee ingenuity is still alive at BYU.

James F. Ashworth won the Mechanical Engineers' Wind-Powered Vehicle Race, using an aluminum pipe with wheels and a propeller. He described his vehicle as "the simplest thing I could think of." Twenty seconds in front of a fan wound a rubber band inside the pipe tight enough to push the thing 169.5 feet to the championship.

Jay L. Butler and John L. Watkins squinted-KSL-Channel Five's TV camera with Alka-seltzer water in a trial run of the boat race. They finally got the bugs worked out of the system and took first place in the junior-senior division of the Chemical Engineering Department's race.

Kent C. Wilson won the freshman-sophomore division, and also had the most beautiful boat — a styrofoam yacht with a blue and white sail.

Douglas Anderson completely blew all other competitors away in the electrical engineers' motor building contest. His motor, built out of 20 nails, a couple of blocks of wood, 100 feet of copper wire and a bunch of masking tape, rapped out 8280 r.p.m.

Winners in other divisions of the contest were Russel F. Ingram and Everton A. Freitas.

The Civil Engineering Department hasn't completed testing all of their balsa wood bridges, but LoRay Soderquist is leading the BYU contest with a bridge that held up to 1310 pounds of pressure from a hydraulic press. It is rumored a high school student has a bridge that held over 1600 pounds, but more information on that was not available.

Mark H. Murphy and Jefferey D. Harrison proved to be the best judges of the amount of time it takes to cool watermelons. Their predictions were the closest to the actual time it took a mellow in an ice bath to cool from 77 degrees to 60 degrees. They each won a watermelon for their efforts.

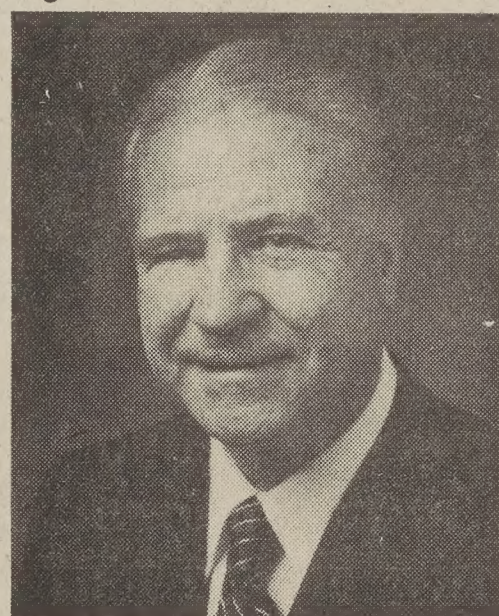

Competition between departments became intense during the Engineers' College Bowl, but the electrical engineering team outthought the others and won the annual rivalry.

David E. Downard, student chairman of Engineering Week, said the departments have announced their outstanding students for the year. They are: Keith Wilson for the chemical engineers; Vergil K. Russon for the mechanical engineers; Wallis Ashcroft and K. Scott Willis tying for the civil engineers; and Roger N. Dorsey and his robot R-2 for the mechanical engineers.

Panel discusses lawyers' ethics

John Cibinic, a George Washington University law professor, will join a group of law professors and practitioners today at 4 p.m. in 303 JRCB for a panel discussion that will look at a lawyer's responsibility to his clients.

JOHN CIBINIC

Other panel members include BYU professor Carl S. Hawkins, a Guy Anderson Distinguished Professor of Laws; Salt Lake City lawyer Gil Athay, who is currently representing the defendants of the Hi-Fi murder incident; and Salt Lake City lawyer F. Robert Bayle, who has served for six years on the Utah State Bar Grievance Committee.

Shiny machines surround and dwarf three-and-a-half pound Michael Allen Burch, Jr., as they contribute to his fight for life.

A technician's fingers adjust the tiny disc on Michael's chest that regulates the heat around him. The smaller black disc monitors the oxygen content of his blood.

"I just want to hold him" Mike and Cindy Burch look wistfully at baby in Utah Valley Hospital's intensive care nursery.

What if our baby is premature?

Cindy Burch's first pregnancy had been completely normal. The baby inside her was progressing on schedule and she felt fine — until nine weeks before the infant's due date. A week ago Sunday, she began to have contractions that she and her husband Mike "thought were false labor pains."

The contractions grew worse. After Cindy's efforts to stop them failed, Mike finally called the pediatrician and she was admitted to Utah Valley Hospital at 6:30 last Monday morning.

Thus a nagging fear of every expecting couple — "What if our baby is born premature?" — became a real-life nightmare for Mike and Cindy Burch, as the hospital staff struggled to keep the child from being born.

"They tried all day to stop the labor," Cindy said. "They started giving me alcohol to stop it." Cindy was also given a drug to speed up the development of the infant's lungs.

When the contractions continued, the flow of alcohol into Cindy's body was finally cut off and "the labor started to speed up."

At 11:30 p.m. three and one-half pound, 17-inch-long Michael Allen Burch, Jr., made a feeble entrance into the world.

Critical first hours

And a tenacious arrival it was. "The first 72 hours are the most critical," said respiratory therapist Kam Miller. Michael's lungs, one of the last parts of an embryo to develop, were still unable to function on their own.

This problem, called Hyaline Membrane disease, is the most common abnormality among premature infants. In a premature infant, the so-called "Type II" cells of a membrane surrounding the outside of the lung to allow for the exchange of gasses are not developed. If he is not assisted in breathing until his lungs develop, they can collapse.

The drug Cindy was given before Michael was born to speed up the development of his lungs is Betamethasol, "a steroid which stimulates the production of Type II cells," Miller said.

Immediately following Michael's birth, he was put on a respiratory machine in UVH's intensive care nursery. Minuscule tubes in his mouth traveled down his trachea to where it forked into the two lungs. After a couple of days, Michael's lungs had matured enough so the tubes could be removed. His tiny head was encased in a clear plastic "humidifier" dome into which oxygen was fed, creating a "warm moist oxygen environment which helps him to breathe," Miller said.

During the first 72 hours, premature infants at UVH are handled only enough to keep them alive. After that, "We try to bathe the least critical babies at least every 24 hours," Miller said. They are sponged off carefully with cotton balls. Other than that, no one is allowed to handle them.

Life-saving machines

UVH's intensive care nursery is a confusing white and metallic mass of technical equipment, tubes and wires. Michael, like most of the babies there, lays on a white sterile bed, clad only in a disposable diaper smaller than a lady's handkerchief. An array of shiny machines surrounds and dwarfs him as it contributes to his fight for life.

Michael is fed through a tube entering his umbilical artery through the navel. Blood is also withdrawn every four hours through his navel, to test its oxygen content.

A black corded disc the size of a nickel connects Michael to a machine emitting paper laced with red lines. The "transcutaneous oxygen monitor" keeps constant track of the oxygen and carbon dioxide supply in his lungs. Such information indicates how mature the baby's lungs are. It also helps the nursery personnel guard against too little oxygen (causing brain damage) or too much (resulting in blindness) entering the baby's brain.

"A baby's body doesn't have a lot of ability to manufacture blood, so we don't like to withdraw it all the time," Miller said. "With the monitor we don't have to."

A larger foil-covered disc on Michael's chest is used to regulate the heat around Michael's body, Miller said. "The probe attached to the baby's skin automatically increases the heat output when it is needed."

Despite the confusing technology, required sterile gowns and the sink for scrubbing up before entering the IC nursery, the atmosphere is warm, concerned.

"We can go in to see our baby anytime, morning or night," Cindy said.

"It is important for the parents to develop a bond with the baby, even when they can't hold it," said Joyce Bown, an IC nursery nurse. "We encourage the parents to touch and fondle the babies." Parents are allowed to hold babies who are on the machines for a long time, she said.

"At first you expect things to get worse before they get better," Cindy said. "It scares you worse than anything, because they don't want to build up your hopes and say he's going to live and then he doesn't. But the nurses kept coming in and comforting me and telling me things would work out for the best."

"The big enemy of the parent is ignorance, not knowing what is going on," Miller said. "People say the hospital atmosphere is cold, but because of the high risk involved with newborns we try and discourage home delivery."

"When the unexpected crops up," he said, "where does the fault lie? The advancement of technology is God-given knowledge. If a person ignores it, he is risking a gift of our Heavenly Father, a life that doesn't belong to him. I don't think a person has a right to do that."

With that "gift" often comes much anxiety. Cindy, a BYU nursing student, worked previously in the LDS Primary Children's Hospital in Salt Lake City, where only premature babies with severe problems are taken. "A lot of the babies there were deformed," she said. "I cried a lot because I was afraid I would have it and something would be wrong. Nobody wants to have a baby that's deformed or has to spend a lot of time away from them — especially where it's the first child. You have a lot of hopes and you buy things for it and everything."

Will he be normal?

"When he was born all we could think about was 'will he make it? Will he be normal?'"

When the baby was born, Mike said, "I was afraid I was going to pass out, but when it happened I didn't even think about that. Afterwards, though, I started getting faint. A lot of praying went into it."

Although it is still too early to tell if Michael is going to be alright when his lungs mature, "we consider him okay," Cindy said. "I guess when they send him home, he'll be okay."

That won't be for another three or four weeks though. "We like to have them weigh about four-and-a-half pounds before we send them home," Miller said.

Cindy, who was released from the hospital last Thursday, said one of the hardest parts is going home without Michael. "I'm going home, but I'm not pregnant and I'm not taking home a baby."

Hundreds of dollars a day

According to Miller, the costs of giving a baby the care Michael is getting add up to hundreds of dollars daily. Fortunately, the Burch family has maternity insurance that will cover most of their costs. But, said hospital personnel, the Burches are unusual.

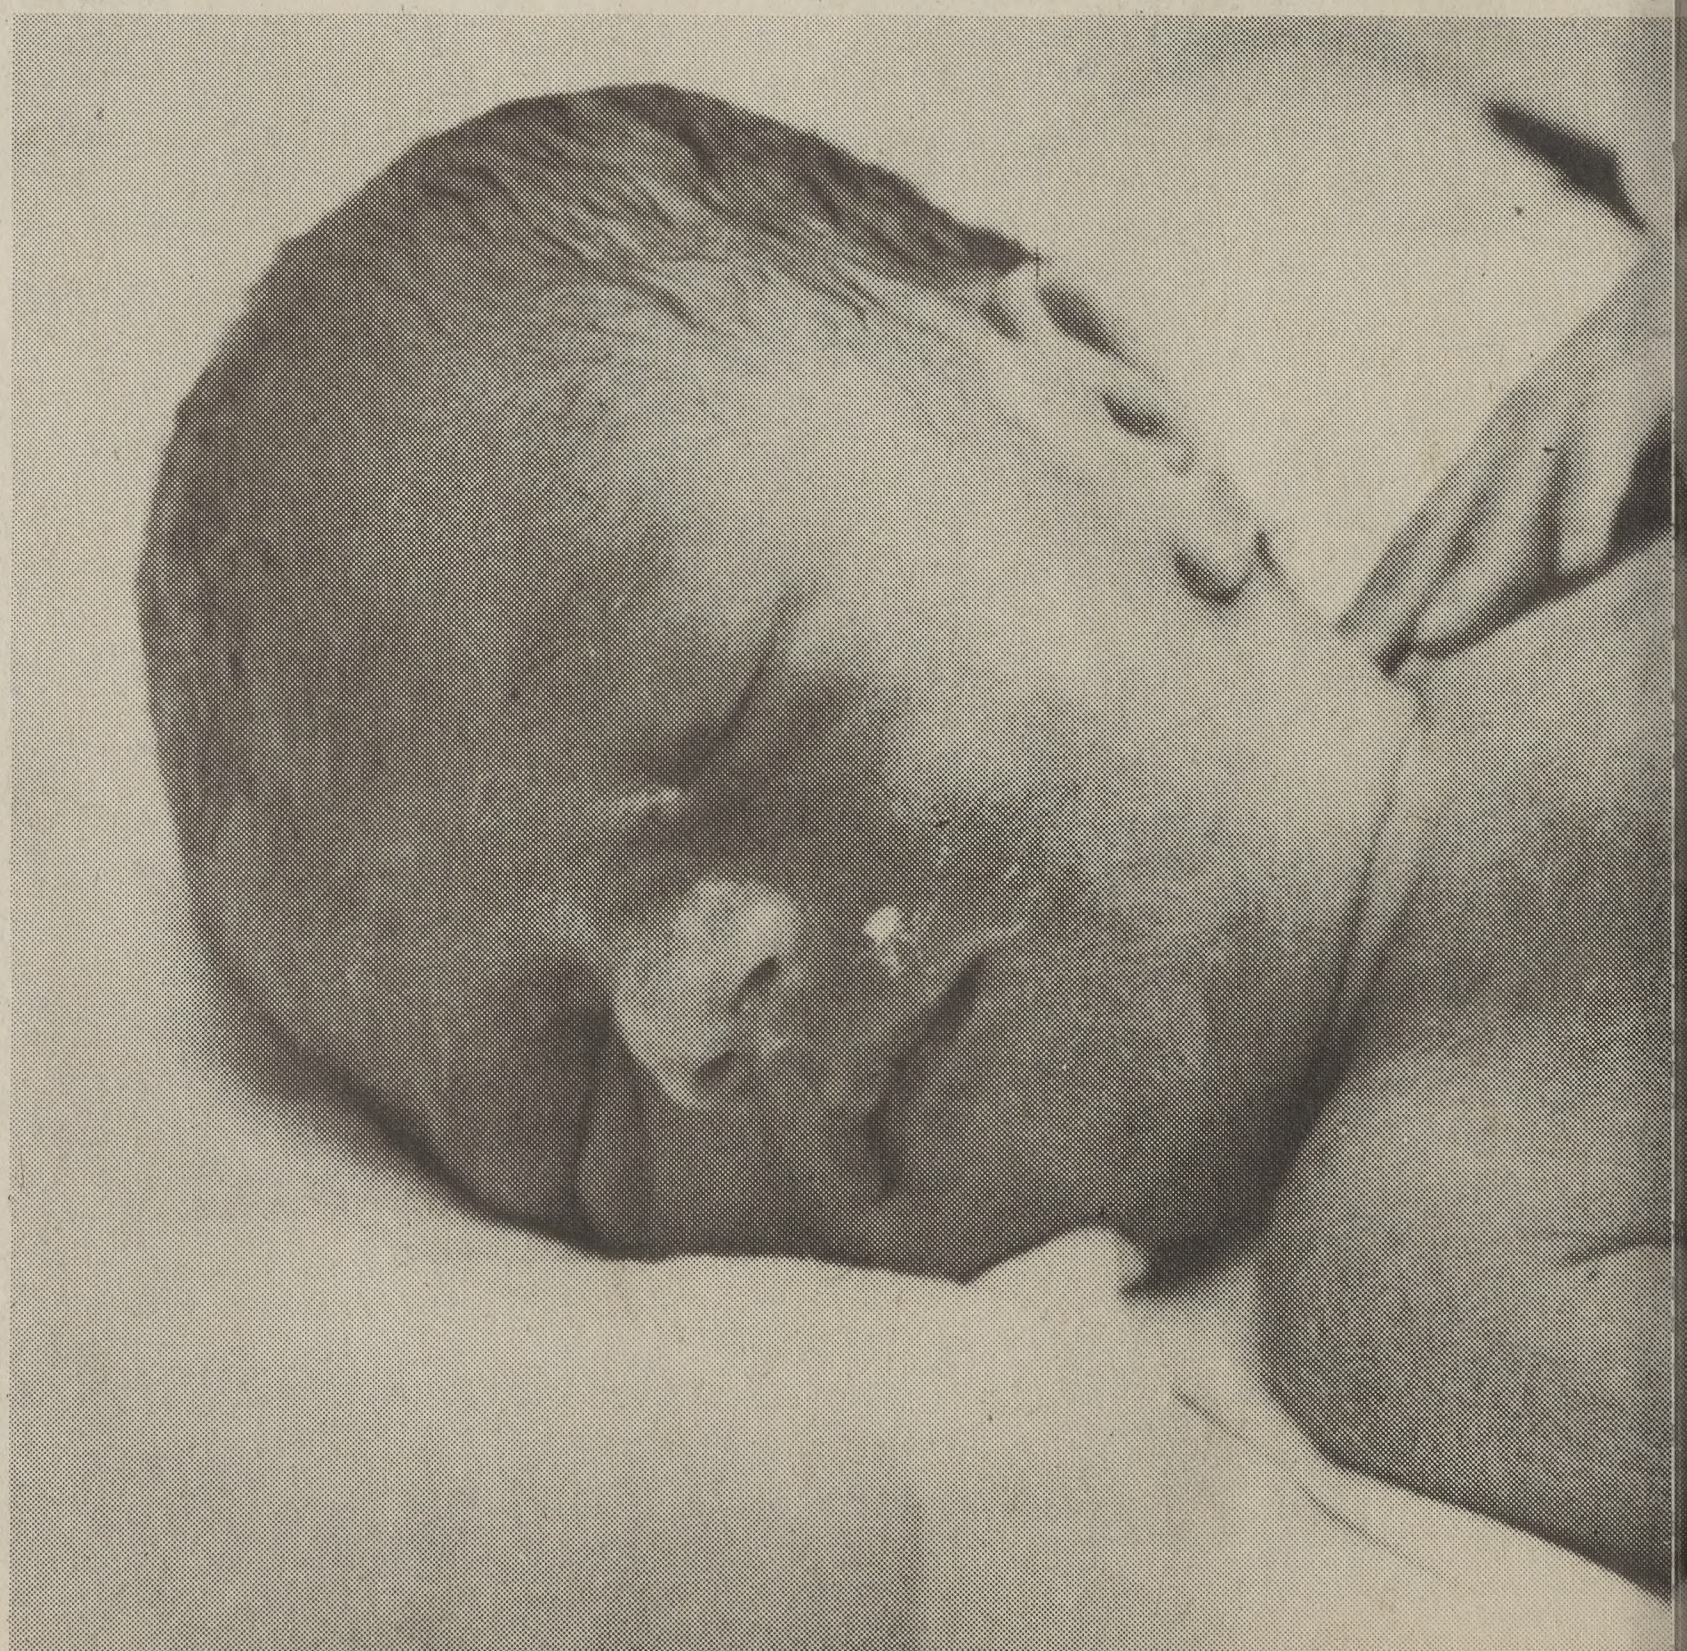

"Ninety percent of the people who have babies here in the IC nursery don't have insurance," said one nurse who works there.

"Some of them have to quit school, or go on welfare to pay $10,000 or $15,000 in medical costs," Miller said. "Some of the babies are in here for six to eight months."

Cindy gently touched Michael's tiny foot with her finger as she stood beside his bed. "I haven't even gotten to hold him yet," she said. "They said I can when they take the humidifier off him."

"I just want to hold him and take care of him." She sighed wistfully and looked up. "But I don't want to take a chance of something going wrong."

"A baby is a gift of God," says respiratory therapist Kam Miller. Technology is "God-given knowledge" which can preserve for him the gift of life.
